

Production results should not be left to nature alone - a little help is needed

Piglet producers around the world are focusing on piglet survival - maybe now even more than ever. Prices on pigs are increasing and the costs of production are stabilized during the last months, making it profitable to produce pigs again. This leaves room for optimism, product development and marketing tests.

We all know that survival of the piglets should not be left to nature alone. A little help may be needed to make more piglets survive. Improved management, extra care and milk supplements may be successful tools to lower mortality among the suckling piglets.

Products for suckling piglets is being marketed, but not always properly tested. Therefore, as a new feature, TestPig is offering to test products for suckling piglets. Please contact us to learn more.

Weaned piglets are challenged by weaning diseases and change of diets. To support the weaned piglets highly digestible nutrients, feed additives, vaccines and proper medication are weapons of choice.

It is a well-known fact that some feed additives are more cost effective than others due to differences in herd health, genetics, management routines and so on. The effect of feedstuffs and feed additives should always be tested under different production conditions by independent research and test stations.

TestPig is ready to assist you when testing your products. Our new Key Account Manager, Jonas From Katholm will take over from August 1, when Niels Ove Nielsen retires.

The TestPig Team wish you all a pleasant summer!
